

Robert Pawliczek (*1986) is a visual artist, self-taught composer, and writer who frequently explores themes of movement, repetition, collecting, sampling, mapping and the associated internal processes. He situates his work between conceptual painting, installation and object art, site-specific and situational art, and experimental sound, video/film, and photography, as well as critical text.

(...) In conclusion I'd like to mention, that approaching from different fields simultaneously, could already be considered collage. Even if this collage isn't visible, it's present. Among many things I am attracted to static structures and superfluous details in architecture. Historism and supply facilities like gas stations, shopping malls or franchise businesses, highways and car culture (...) trains and other means of transportation, it's visual and philosophical value observed and collected on the road. Consumption and the collective memories that surrounds it. The byproducts of the spectacle and its effects to attract attention. The mainstream and its resulting waste, produced to be absorbed or replaced and forgotten, constantly filtering and translating in order to reduce the excess to the essentials. (...)

Pawliczek studied performative art and sculpture under Monica Bonvicini and abstract painting under Erwin Bohatsch at the Academy of Fine Arts Vienna (Austria). He also attended a painting class under Jiří Kovanda and Vladimír Skrepl at AVU in Prague (Czech Republic), graduating in 2013. He runs the small art publishing house DIDT Publishing, composes experimental music, sound and video designs for film and theater productions, and co-founded of the non-profit Drift – Innovative Film & Video Art Association, an artist-collective and archive for art film. Since his teens, Pawliczek has been involved in various projects in the underground & DIY scene, performed all over the globe, and runs the tape-label Die Plattenfirma as well as a newer platform called Quality Music Records.
